In 1792, the merchant ship "Adventure" embarked on a fateful voyage from England to the West Indies. Among its crew were two young boys, John Randal and William Moss. As the ship sailed through treacherous waters, disaster struck. A violent storm tossed the vessel relentlessly, until it finally succumbed to the relentless fury of the sea.

John and William found themselves clinging to a piece of wreckage, their lives hanging in the balance. Miraculously, they managed to stay afloat for two days, enduring exposure to the elements and the terrifying isolation of the open ocean.
