

The Americans Who Stood With Britain In Its Darkest Finest Hour

An inspiring story of courage, sacrifice, and the unbreakable bond between two nations

In the darkest days of World War II, when Britain stood alone against the Nazi juggernaut, a small but determined group of Americans came to her aid. These brave men and women, known as the American Eagle Squadron, volunteered to fight in the Royal Air Force, even though their own country was not yet at war.

The American Eagle Squadron was formed in September 1940, just weeks after the Battle of Britain began. At that time, the RAF was badly outnumbered and outgunned by the Luftwaffe, and it was clear that Britain could not win the war without help from its allies.
