The Early Years

The first singers to achieve international fame were opera singers. In the 19th century, Italian opera was all the rage, and singers like Enrico Caruso and Adelina Patti became household names. Caruso, with his powerful voice and charismatic stage presence, was known as the "King of Tenors."

Patti, with her exquisite coloratura soprano, was one of the most popular singers of her time.

In the early 20th century, opera began to give way to popular music. Jazz singers like Louis Armstrong and Billie Holiday emerged as major stars, and their unique styles of singing influenced generations of musicians to come.

The Golden Age of Singing

The 1950s and 1960s saw the emergence of a new generation of singers who would come to be known as the "Golden Age of Singing." These singers included Frank Sinatra, Dean Martin, Sammy Davis Jr., and Doris Day. With their smooth voices and sophisticated style, they defined the sound of American popular music for a generation.

In the opera world, the Golden Age was marked by the rise of Maria Callas. Callas, with her powerful voice and dramatic stage presence, was one of the most acclaimed sopranos of all time. She was known for her intense performances, which often left audiences in tears.

The Modern Era

In the 1970s and 1980s, a new wave of singers emerged, who would come to dominate the pop charts. These singers included Elton John, Madonna, Michael Jackson, and Whitney Houston. With their catchy songs and energetic performances, they became global superstars.

In the opera world, the modern era has seen the rise of singers like Plácido Domingo and Renée Fleming. Domingo, with his powerful voice and charismatic stage presence, has become one of the most successful opera singers of all time. Fleming, with her beautiful soprano voice, has starred in some of the world's most prestigious opera houses.
